Farmers Trust Company, New York City, was dining pleasantly in Antoine's famous restaurant in New Orleans not long ago when he was surprised and a bit annoyed to be summoned to the telephone. He didn't think anyone who was likely to telephone him knew he was in New Orleans, or, at any rate, that he would be at Antoine's.

But it seems that several days previously Mr. Miller had stopped at Hattiesburg, Miss., to place a long distance call to Slidell, La., from a booth in the lobby of the telephone business office. He had written the Slidell number on the back of an envelope which contained a check for $50, and that night John Beasley, the janitor at the Hattiesburg telephone office, found the envelope and the check. This he gave to Mrs. N. W. Shinn, collection clerk.

Mrs. Shinn requested the assistant chief operator, Mrs. Sallie Bell Smith, to try to locate Mr. Miller. This she [illegible] on the back of the envelope. There she found that Mr. Miller had gone on to New Orleans. Through a relative in that city it was learned that he might be dining at Antoine's, which explains why Mr. Miller's dinner was interrupted by the telephone call.

The envelope containing the check was forwarded to Mr. Miller by mail. He was much impressed by the very unusual service rendered him and concluded that the Southern Bell Telephone Company must have a Department of Astrology, or something like that, to succeed in locating him at Antoine's.
